Worked for me

By Michael L. Smiley Sr. on May 2, 2014

Verified Purchase

I'm down to taking one medication a day for HBP, down from taking two. I decided that I wanted to see if I could find something that would lower my blood pressure without relying on medication. So I found this tea and decided to give it a go. I've been taking it for almost a month and I am happy with the results. Before taking the tea my BP was around 140/89, it is now 122/74. This morning I decided to try a little experiment. I took my BP before having a cup of tea and it was 122/89, I then had a cup of the tea and after a half hour took my BP again this time it was 106/74. I know this is not scientific proof, but it works for me. Your experience may be totally different due to other factors.

I am not big on bagged tea but this one is not bad. A bit high priced, but to add a bag to a larger brewing it works very well in both floral and fruity blends. Just depends on what your looking for. I did feel better while drinking it but there were a few factors to consider.

I bought this online for my husband. I was going to order a more expensive brand from another online store, but this was fabulous.

Not only did it lower his blood pressure, he felt lighter and energetic

(the tea has detox properties) and he was "friskier".

My husband takes the worst care of himself and if this can help him it will help anyone.

GREAT OPTION FOR THOSE SEEKING NATURAL/AT HOME HELP

By CygneNoir on January 5, 2017

Verified Purchase

After I changed careers, I found I had high blood pressure, after a lifetime of having LOW BLOOD PRESSURE. I am not willing to get blood pressure medication, such as Lisinipril, yet. Prescription meds are expensive, my healthcare plan is pretty lousy, I am not sure which doctor I will get each time. My husband already takes medication for hypertension by the way.

Drinking this tea helps us lower our blood pressure (for me significantly, for him, just somewhat) without prescription medication.

Naturally, do not do this before or without your doctor's approval, lest you have a stroke, but if you have some room for self-help this will likely be a good option for you.

The tea isn't horrible, but it is a bit gamey. Sometimes we drink this with a bit of wild honey or a tiny dab of brown sugar.

Good for Headache Relief

By DanielleM on December 27, 2012

I don't have any blood pressure issues, but do get chronic headaches that sometimes don't respond to the usual therapies (aspirin, relaxation, hot/cold pack). Bought this tea in a last-ditch effort to ease my head pain, thinking maybe I was suffering from inflammation pressure. The first time I drank it, my headache was gone within minutes. Very impressive! This tea hasn't been a magic bullet for getting rid of my headaches, but more often than not it brings relief. Thank you

No Effect on BP

By Jostaman on May 18, 2016

I posted a review stating that the tea does not work and the review mysteriously disappeared. With all the claims of how this tea saved lives and decreased BP, I decided to give it a try. I tend to be more analytical than the average person, coming from a heavy science background. To give this tea a fair shot at doing what they say it does, I'll do a controlled experiment. Came off my meds for a week leading up to using the tea. BP meds linger in the system for 3-5 days, pressure

Very nice flavor, not sure if it actually does the trick or it's really does anything more than hibiscus tea which can be bought cheaper in bulk but it's a nice tea

I was surprised to find this to be so tasty. I am brewing 2 cups per day, and alternate with finely grated fresh ginger and lemon in a cup of boiling water. It makes me just feel better.

No flavor whatsoever. You would need 3 tea bags steaming for 30 minutes to get even a small hint of tea. If boiling water alone lowers your BP then maybe that is what they are selling.
